

Universidad de Navarra

Ignacio Moriyón, Doctor in Biological Sciences (University of Navarra, Spain, 1976). Ph.D. in Bacteriology (University of Wisconsin-Madison, USA, 1982). Emeritus Professor at the School of Medicine, University of Navarra, Spain, his research has been dedicated to Brucella and brucellosis, with emphasis on the structure and genetics of bacterial surface molecules and their involvement in innate immunity recognition, the central carbon metabolism of the pathogen and the development of animal vaccines and diagnostic tests for human and animal brucellosis suitable for low-resource areas. Former member (1986-2006) of the Subcommittee on the Taxonomy of Brucella of ICSP. He has served as consultant for the Swedish International Foundation for Science, the International Atomic Energy Agency, the Spanish “Comisión Asesora de Investigación Científica y Tecnológica y Ministerio de Economía y Competitividad”, the Ibero-American “Comité Gestor del Área de Salud CYTED”, The European Union DISCONTTOOLS Brucellosis panel, The European Commission TMR training Grants, Science Research and Development, the French “Agence Nationale de la Recherche”, the Panamerican Health Organization and the World Health Organization.

Coordinator or Principal Researcher of 13 competitive projects, including 4 EU funded projects and 3 projects with activities in Morocco, Nigeria, Mozambique, Tanzania, Uganda and Kenya.

Author/co-author of 10 Book & Book Chapters, 167 Research Articles; 5 Education and Outreach reviews, 5 Letters to Editors, and 18 published Symposia and Workshops

ORCID \(https://orcid.org/0000-0002-4288-0195\). Researcher ID: N-4764-2016 (h index, 51; 7.642 citations).

Google scholar h index 66; hi10 index 159 \(14.300 citations\).